Plate Flaw In The 7d. Air Mail Issue Of New Zealand

by Doug Tennant

Introduction

After the First World War the regular transport of mail by air became a possibility with the development of aircraft and air service companies. In New Zealand there were experimental flights in the 1920s but postal authorities waited until connections were established between Britain and Australia, and the UPU Air Mail Convention of 1929 came into effect on 1 July 1930. Under the Convention, articles for transmission by air mail were to be prepaid in addition to the ordinary postal charges with a special air mail fee. The need for New Zealand airmail stamps was clear. A design, initially for a 3d. value, was selected in November 1930. Authority to use the design for 4d. and 7d. values was given the week before Christmas, 1930. The values were intended primarily to pay for specific air services: 3d. within Australia, 4d. within Australia to other destinations, and the 7d. for the Karachi – London service operated through Imperial Airways. To enable New Zealanders to send Christmas mail to family and friends via an overseas airmail service, the planned time of issue was November 1931.

Production by surface printing was selected and the Royal Mint received the contract to produce the dies and nickel electrotype plates. The production of the 1931 1d. + 1d. 'red boy' health stamp had set this path. Delays occurred with the plates for the airmail issue being finished in September 1931 and arriving in Auckland on November 4 together with the plate proof sheets. Printing of 500 sheets of each value proceeded on November 5 to meet the November 10 issue date. There was some urgency to getting the airmail stamps printed and distributed. Demand appears to have justified a second printing of 500 sheets occurring on 17 November.

Finding a Plate Flaw

A plate flaw was missed. The Museum of New Zealand / Te Papa Tongarewa holds the defaced printing plates of the 1931 airmails, and on the 7d. plate I found a circular dent below the 'R' of 'AIR' at row 6, position 7. The flaw arose from an indentation in the plate that appears to have been made by a punch to remove a small protruding bit of metal. The plate proof showed the flaw and a check of the printed 7d. sheets also held at Te Papa confirmed that this flaw is constant - there is one in each sheet of 120 stamps.

Quantity Produced

The 7d. airmail stamp remained in production for just over two and a half years so I checked the Government Printing Office, Stamp Printing Branch Records to establish how many of the flaws were produced. Here is the result:

The appearance of the flaw in the printed stamp does vary over the period of production, possibly due to changes in the ink used. In the initial printing it is mottled and can be hard to detect; in the later printings the flaw can appear nearly white and is easy to see – when you're looking for it.

Appearance in the Trans-Tasman Issue

New Zealand issued a commemorative 7d. airmail in 1934 for Charles Ulm's February 17 flight to Australia carrying the first official air mail from New Zealand. Setting the rate at 7d. meant that the existing plate could be used.

There was a change in ink colour to, appropriately, sky-blue but the same printing plate was used. Accordingly, the row 6/7 flaw appears again. However, the issue was quite limited as the printing records show:

The reduction in the number remaining deserves an explanation. Because the issue was intended to commemorate this first airmail flight, the stamps were ordered to be withdrawn from sale after the aircraft departed. They were returned to Wellington for destruction. Post Office records indicate that about 784 sheets were destroyed – that's a little over 53 percent of the printing. Consequently, finding the flaw on 7d. Trans-Tasman airmail is a challenge. At most there can be about 692 copies. The reason for the approximation is that part sheets were returned; so, if the right side of sheets was sold more often than the left, then more stamps with the flaw would be in circulation.

It was exciting to find a new variety in an older stamp issue and to be able to locate copies with quite a lot of checking sites on the internet and the stocks dealers such as Campbell Paterson obligingly bring to stamp shows. You never know what you, as hunter and collector, will find.

New Issue Notes

by Andrew Dolphin

He Tohu: a Declaration, a Treaty, a Petition (17 May 2017)

This is an interesting little set of stamps – little being the operative word: how refreshing to see just a three stamp set of stamps, complete in and of itself, without unnecessary accompanying miniature sheet; instead of the more usual six, eight or ten stamp sets and one or two extra miniature sheets more usually produced.

The three constitutional documents featured are:

$1.00 1835 Declaration of Independence of the United Tribes of New Zealand He Whakaputanga o te Rangatiratanga o Nu Tirenī. This was a document signed at Waitangi on 28 October 1835 by thirty-five Northland chiefs at a meeting convened by the British Resident James Busby, in which the chiefs declared themselves to be the heads of a sovereign state, the United Tribes of New Zealand, and requested the protection of the British King William IV. The declaration was overridden by the Treaty of Waitangi. The background is in a Pacific blue colour and the stamp features historic and modern New Zealanders.

$2.00 1840 Treaty of Waitangi Te Tiriti o Waitangi. Signed on 6 February 1840 by Capt William Hobson and 45 tribal chiefs, and regarded as the founding document of Aotearoa New Zealand. The background is described as an ochre colour with vivid orange kaka wing feathers and the two figures on the stamp reflect partnership.

$2.20 1893 Women's Suffrage Petition Te Petihana Wkakamana Poti Wahine. After an intensive campaign and a series of annual petitions to Parliament, New Zealand became the first nation in the world in 1893 to have full adult suffrage. The background colour is purple and again the stamp features historic and modern New Zealanders.

The three documents are on display at a new permanent exhibition He Tohu in the National Library of New Zealand Te Puna Matauranga o Aotearoa in Wellington which opened 20 May 2017.

Designed by Spencer Levine, Story Inc, Wellington and printed by Southern Colour Print Ltd, Dunedin by offset lithography in the four process colours with synseal overgloss, perf 14½, on Tullis Russell 104gsm red-phosphor gummed stamp-paper. Three stamps in sheets of 25.
